THE ROOK

1

INT. DUNGEON-NIGHT

1

In the deepest darkest depths of the Red Kingdom sits a man imprisoned in a dungeon for many years but not for any crime he has committed, this is his home until the day the queen needs him to carry out her bidding. The Rook sits in complete darkness like a statue never moving a muscle, he is full of dust and cob webs, is this beast; this machine even human.

THE ROOK (V.O)

Mother darkness hold me in your stillness give the strength to endure this punishment that god has bestowed upon me. To be born into darkness and to live without the sunlight is a fate worse than death.

The ROOK in the same position as before.

THE ROOK (V.O)

My soul weeps, for it remembers the freedom just outside of these stone walls. Memories of the sunlight penetrating my skin and the fresh air filling my lungs. Or maybe it is not a memory, but instead a dream. A beautiful dream...

In the dungeon a small beam of light shines down directly on the Rook

THE ROOK (V.O)

Please Lord, has it really been 5 years since the last time I stepped upon the ground, since I tasted that beautiful freedom? Why do you not speak? Here I sit here patiently waiting day after day, your obedient servant, but I must know my Queen... when will I get the chance to kill again?
